The major objective of the survey was to evaluate, select, and recommend foods that have the best potential of satisfying the requirements for extending mission endurance and reducing logistic burden aboard submarines. Alternative menu designs, based on logistic-effective foods, will be used as an integral part of a detailed system analysis of the food service. This analysis will determine the potential for using logistic-effective foods in existing on-board food service systems to extend mission endurance without compromising consumer acceptance.

SURVEY OF FOODS TO IMPROVE LOGISTIC SUPPORT AND EXTEND MISSION ENDURANCE OF SUBMARINES

I. Introduction

A military requirement exists to increase the mission endurance of naval vessels, especially submarines. The current food service system on submarines directly affects mission endurance. The system is designed to use a garrison-type menu that is based on conventional food packaging and equipment. The system satisfies the operational and subsistence requirements of onboard personnel under routine conditions. Conventional foods, however, because of cube, weight, and perishability factors, impose operating constraints on mission endurance that could create serious difficulties under combat conditions. Current subsistence requirements for extended missions exceed onboard food storage locker capacity; consequently, subsistence must be stored in critical operating areas. This practice further restricts movement of personnel in an already crowded environment and, under combat conditions, could impede operations. To address this problem, it was considered essential that a survey of current and projected advances in logistic-effective foods be conducted as an integral part of a program to modify the food service system and improve the operational capability and mission endurance of submarines.

Logistic-effective subsistence items rank high in interest because they present the best potential for increasing mission capability and endurance. These foods offer significant logistic advantages and require minimal storage, preparation, and equipment usage.

The objective of this study was to conduct a comprehensive state-of-the-art survey to identify:

- a. Logistic-effective foods currently available in the military subsistence system:
- b. Logistic-effective foods currently developed but not in the system that are either commercially available or could be procured in small quantities for test purposes within one year.

A system analysis is planned that will determine the efficiency of these logistic-effective foods as components of alternative menu designs to be used in the current or a modified submarine food service system. Results of this analysis will determine those logistic-effective foods that meet the criteria for inclusion in a menu to improve capability and endurance, while continuing to provide the sustenance and satisfaction of onboard personnel under combat conditions.

II. Procedure

A. Source Data

A Natick Laboratories computerized model was used to calculate and establish a baseline of recipe ingredients and logistical requirements for a typical 42-day Navy food service menu. The computer run provides a breakout of individual ingredients, the recipes in which each item is used, the day and meal for which each item is served, the issue factor, quantity of ingredients used per recipe, and total quantity of each ingredient required for the typical 42-day menu cycle. This information is provided in Appendix A. Each ingredient listed in the computer run and all of the recipes in which it was used were reviewed. A comprehensive state-of-the-art survey was conducted to determine potential logistic-effective replacements for each ingredient. An evaluation was then made to determine the most applicable substitute item that currently exists or could be readily developed that would most effectively meet one or more of the established criteria. These criteria and codes for each area follow:

Impact Criteria	Code
Increase ration density	1
Decrease Logistical costs	2
Reduce number of line items	3
Conserve on-board refrigeration space	4
Reduce food service labor requirements	5
Reduce waste disposal	6
Conserve energy	7

B. Selection Criteria

Some items do not meet all criteria; consequently, the selection priority is based primarily on the ability of the substitute item to achieve increased ration density, and each subsequent criterion has a lower priority. For example, in the computer run, Chicken, Frozen, Broiler-Fryer, Whole (National Stock Number (NSN) 8905-00-126-3416) is specified as the chicken meat source for Armed Forces Recipes L129 (Chicken a la King) and N008 (Chicken Salad Sandwich).¹ These recipes require boneless, diced chicken meat; therefore, potential logistic-effective substitutes for the specified source would be as follows:

Item	NSN
1. Chicken, Dehydrated, Diced, Cooked, Compressed	8905-00-138-7167
2. Chicken, Dehydrated, Diced, Cooked	8905-00-753-6247
3. Turkey, Boneless, Frozen, Cooked	8905-01-025-6032
4. Turkey, Boneless, Frozen, Raw	8905-00-926-9221
5. Chicken, Canned, Boned, Pieces	8905-00-753-6106
6. Chicken Meat, Frozen, Diced, Cooked	Commercial

¹ Technical Manual 10-142, Armed Forces Recipe Service, February 1969.

Following an evaluation of these potential candidates, item 1 was determined to be the most applicable in meeting the basic criteria previously established. Therefore, this item is recommended as the prime candidate for evaluating alternative menu designs in the planned food service system analysis. If for any reason item 1 is found unacceptable, then each succeeding item can be evaluated until an acceptable replacement is found.

C. Quality Equivalent Factor

A quality equivalent factor is provided for each logistic-effective ingredient recommended to replace current menu ingredients. This factor is necessary because the parameters that determine end product acceptability, such as, sensory attributes, physical characteristics, and nutritional and satiety value, will vary depending on the logistic-effective replacement. Recipes prepared with logistic-effective ingredients may not be as acceptable as recipes prepared with replaced ingredients. Different preparation instructions and/or recipe modifications will be required. Considerable subjective judgment is required to select potential logistic-effective replacements for existing ingredients to consider in developing an alternative menu design. Unrealistic replacements are not included in the report; however, it is recognized that some logistic-effective items are more recipe-adaptable than others. The quality equivalent factor therefore is an estimate of the adaptability of each logistic-effective item for use in the current 42-day menu cycle recipes. The quality equivalent factor ratings are:

Adaptability	Rating Code
Comparable (no modification required)	1
Acceptable (minor modification required)	2
Questionable (major modification required)	3

It is important to recognize that another criterion in the development of suitable alternatives to the current menu cycle is customer acceptance. Developmental effort will be required to establish preparation instructions, recipe modification, and revisions needed to compensate for any reduced menu acceptance as a result of substituting logistic-effective ingredients.

D. Use Factor

A direct comparison of the cube and net weight of the logistic-effective replacement and the item it replaces would not indicate its true advantage. A use factor is required to establish the advantage. For example, Beef, Diced, Dehydrated, Compressed is the logistic-effective item recommended to replace item 118 — Beef, Diced, Raw. The logistic-effective substitute has a cube of 1.16 ft³* and a net weight of 44 lb; but one case of the Beef, Diced, Raw has a cube of 0.87 ft³ and a net weight of 50 lb. A direct comparison of cube and net weight would indicate that the logistic-effective substitute provides little logistical advantage. The use factor must be considered. This factor is the ratio of the required weight of the logistic-effective substitute to the weight of the item it replaces. In this example, only 0.3 as much of the logistic effective product is required to replace the item in use. Because 44 lb of dehydrated, compressed beef will rehydrated to 150 lb, one case will replace three cases of frozen diced beef with the following logistical advantage.

*The data used came out of the Federal Supply catalog that uses only US customary units and not the metric system.

	Cases	Net Weight	Cube
Beef, Diced, Frozen	3.00	150.0 lb	2.61 ft ³
Beef, Diced, Dehydrated, Compressed	1.00	44.0 lb	1.16 ft³
Logistical Advantage	2.00	10.6 lb	1.45 ft ³

E. Operational Impact

This information is provided to indicate the areas that would be favorably influenced by each logistic-effective ingredient when substituted for the baseline menu specified item. The impacts and assigned codes are as follows:

Impact	Code
Cube reduction	1
Weight reduction	2
Labor saving	3
Energy saving	4
Line item reduction	5
Item endurance extended	6
Waste disposal reduction	7
Deletion	8

F. Other Data

The remainder of the data provided for each logistic-effective ingredient recommended is as follows:

- a. Applicable recipes in which it can be used
- b. Unit of issue
- c. Replaced ingredient
- d. Gross and net weight

- e. Cube
- f. Storage condition.

This information is self-explanatory and requires no detailed explanation.

III. Results and Discussion

A list of logistic-effective foods (Appendix B) is submitted showing candidates for a detailed system, analysis of the current submarine food service system, and logistical support requirements. A computer model for calculating NLABS logistical requirements will be utilized to evaluate the current menu against alternative menu designs using the candidate items. This analysis will determine the efficiency of alternative menu designs to improve logistics, onboard food service system, costs, and mission endurance. Dehydrated, and dehydrated/reversibly-compressed foods that can be stored in a fraction of the space required by their conventional counterparts are expected to be most successful in fulfilling the prime requirement of increasing mission endurance by reducing the weight and cube requirements of subsistence. Caution must be exercised in developing space-saving menu cycles based on logistic-effective foods to the point of severely limiting conventional foods. It is questionable whether long-term use of such a menu cycle would be acceptable. Acceptability limitations of menu cycles based on high usage of logistic-effective foods need to be addressed. It is important to determine the degree to which substitutions can be made before a compromise in menu acceptance is reached. Cost and availability, which place limitations on the use of the logistic-effective foods, also need to be addressed. Production costs of the most effective logistic-effective foods are high. Research and development efforts must be undertaken to advance the state of the art through improved processing, manpower, and energy utilization to increase production rates and to lower costs. Industrial capabilities for the production of logistic-effective foods are potentially favorable, but at present, are limited to a few producers. To encourage industry participation emphasis should be placed on research programs that concentrate on technologies, processes, and systems that can be adopted by industry with minimum investment and technical effort. It is important that the procurement base be expanded consistent with meeting the requirements of the current as well as of the new generation of improved food service systems.

IV. Conclusion

The basic objective of the improved system can be achieved by increased use of logistic-effective foods. Tests will be required to determine at what level such foods could be used without compromising menu acceptance. Impediments to their use could be one or a combination of the following:

- a. Cost;
- b. Availability;
- c. Acceptability.

Present and planned research and development efforts should be directed towards development that will lower costs, improve product acceptance, and increase industry participation. Intensified efforts are required so the full potential for use of logistic-effective foods can be realized in the improved food service systems. A review of the 42-day baseline menu shows that the rate of development by NLABS of logistic-effective foods currently exceeds the rate of their absorption into the military subsistence system.

V. Recommendations

Reasons for the slow acceptance and use of logistic-effective foods in the military subsistence system should be determined and an immediate effort undertaken to eliminate existing impediments to their use.
